The study of Global Value Chains (GVCs) is one of the best ways to fully understand the modern organisation of production processes and international trade. The increasing importance of GVCs has also significant implications at the national and regional levels. Understanding the factors that shape the patterns of GVCs, and the interplay of their occurrence at macro, meso and micro levels, are key topics for researchers, policy makers and firms alike.

To this end, the Centro Rossi-Doria and the Department of Economics organize the Fifth Workshop on Global Value Chains: Updating our Knowledge on Global Value Chains to be held at Roma Tre University, in Rome on the 22 and 23 March 2018. The aim of this two-days Workshop is to bring together researchers working on GVC topics to present and discuss their ongoing research. The focus of the Workshop is on the discussion of the organization, firms' performance and policies of GVCs after the trade collapse.
